Dextrys' Business Model and Its Top Chinese Executive Honored with Outsourcing Industry Awards

China Outsourcing Firm Recognized by the 2008 International Forum of China Outsourcing Development and Cooperation

WAKEFIELD, Mass. (June 09, 2008) — Dextrys, a premier US-based China outsourcing firm delivering Product Engineering and Application Services, and its president of Asia operations, James Tong, garnered high accolades at the 2008 China Outsourcing Development and Cooperation International Forum (CODC) recently held in Wuhan, Hubei.

Dextrys accepted the 2008 award for “Best Business Model within the China Outsourcing Service Industry,” and Dextrys president of Asia operations, James Tong, received recognition as one of the year’s “Top 10 Outsourcing Service Industry Leaders.”

The forum, sponsored by top leaders of the Ministries and Provinces of China, and several domestic and international experts within the service outsourcing industry, recognized Dextrys’ successful business model – providing a seamless integration of local China engineering expertise and a US-based client facing organization with deep experience in global delivery.

The contributions to the outsourcing service industry in China by Dextrys president of Asia operations, James Tong, were also aptly noted. Mr. Tong was praised as “a shining star in promoting the rapid development of Information Technology Outsourcing in China.”

“We believe our business model offers a best-of-breed solution for US companies looking to leverage China as an outsourcing destination, and it’s an honor that the CODC recognizes this as well,” said Brian Keane, CEO of Dextrys. “It is our goal to ‘make China easy’ for clients and these awards underscore of the remarkable work our organization and its leaders are doing.”
